BLACK AND WHITE AND READ ALL OVER

Archives: Lockie Hunter

A long time resident of the American South and of San Francisco, Lockie Hunter now lives in Boston where she is enrolled as an MFA student in the creative writing program at Emerson College. She is that girl on the beach with her nose stuck in a book and is currently working on a Southern novel in hopes of preserving the eccentricities of her family and the region. You can reach her at lockie\_hunter@Emerson.edu lockie\_hunter@Emerson.edu.

The Peril of Ceiling Fans by Lockie Hunter

28 June 2006

In South Carolina's beach country, not having air conditioning, nevermind fans, is these days downright strange. A personal memoir of worried grandmothers and infant decapitation.

FROM THE ATTIC

Martha's Big Day

by Danny Gregory

The city loves a big trial, especially when a big name is under the spotlight. Our favorite artist Danny Gregory spent a day at Martha Stewart's public trial and sent us some drawings from the courthouse.

The Lonely Days

by Bob Powers

Many people have their own holidays – grandparents, secretaries, certain dead Presidents – but what about the ordinary man, lost in this modern world? Bob Powers has researched a global brochure of holidays for men who are alone.

The Lies, Resigned

by Andrew Womack

In this album San Francisco's The Lies have crafted an intense, lovely, soaring effort that touches so many different levels...

Requiem for Boddy

by Matthew Baldwin

A somber moment, remembering a departed friend. Reflecting on a life of wartime heroics, stateside baronism, and missed opportunities, Matthew Baldwin takes the podium and says a few words.
